The "Official" Texas Court Reports: Birth, Death and Resurrection

By Jim Paulsen
And James Hambleton

In many states, as well as in the federal government, high court opinions are found in both official and unofficial versions. At the federal level, for example, United States Supreme Court opinions are generally available in four published formats: United States Supreme Court Reports; Lawyers' Edition (Lawyers' Co-op), Supreme Court Reporter (West Publishing), United States Law Week (BNA) and United States Reports. The first three sources, produced by private publishers, have the respective advantages of annotations, headnotes and timely publication. The last reporter, published by the United States government, has little to recommend it, research-wise. It is, however, the only "official" copy of United States Supreme Court opinions for purposes of citation and resolution of textual discrepancies.

Texas, like a number of other states, has ceased publication of its "official" reporters — Texas Reports on the civil side and Texas Criminal Reports for criminal cases. What, then, is the "official" version of a Texas Supreme Court or Court of Criminal Appeals decision today? The Southwestern Reporter? Southwestern Reporter: Texas Cases? The Texas Supreme Court Journal? Perhaps the original signed typescript on record in the court clerk's office?

The answer, as the reader may have guessed, is "none of the above." But, as we shall see, a current "official" source for court opinions is, in fact, mandated by the state Legislature. Yet no one today could possibly find or cite this current "official" version of Texas Supreme Court or Court of Criminal Appeals opinions. And therein hangs a tale.

The distinction between "official" and "unofficial" texts of Texas opinions may seem like a particularly obscure trivia question. After all, even the Supreme Court of Texas sometimes trips up and forgets to cite the official Texas Reports for cases decided prior to 1963. See, e.g., Island Recreational Development Corp. v. Republic of Texas Savings Ass'n, 28 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 534, 535 (July 3, 1985).

On occasion, however, significant differences between the official and unofficial reporters can crop up. For example, in Kennedy v. Hyde, 682 S.W.2d 525 (Tex. 1984), the Texas Supreme Court noted a typographical discrepancy between Texas Reports and the Southwestern Reporter. Id. at 527 n. 1. The typo reversed the meaning of the cited passage. Such examples are (we hope) rare. Nonetheless, they do justify a brief examination of "official" reporters in Texas.

All in all, Texas seems never to have had an easy time with official court reports. The first attempt, in fact, never got off the ground. The Congress of the Republic of Texas authorized appointment of an official court reporter, at a munificent salary of $1,000 per year, to publish the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Republic. See An Act Requiring the Supreme Court to Appoint a Reporter, Jan. 21, 1840, Laws of the Republic of Texas, 4th Cong. 227, 2 H. Gammel, Laws of Texas 401 (1898). There was a hitch, though — the legislation would not take effect until 400 pages of decisions were ready for printing. Since the Republic expired long before this threshold was met, no "official" copies of the decisions were ever printed. (Dallam's Digest was a private, for-profit venture, published at an initial cost of six dollars per copy.)

The first state Legislature failed to pass legislation specifically mandating an official reporter. The Supreme Court of Texas, however, apparently proceeded on the assumption that the Republic statute, not having been repealed, still had general validity. As a result, preparation of the first volume of Texas Reports was soon underway.

Texas lawmakers belatedly endorsed the project, placing an order for "three hundred copies of the decisions of the Supreme Court of this State, now being prepared for publication by a Reporter appointed by said Court, provided that the cost shall not exceed six dollars per volume." Joint Resolution of Feb. 18, 1848, ch. 43, 1848 Tex. Gen. Laws 32, 3 H. Gammel, Laws of Texas 32 (1898).

While the Supreme Court of the State of Texas began issuing opinions in 1846, the presses did not begin to roll until 1848. For this reason, the first text from the first official report was an apology:

"The volume here offered to the public embraces the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Texas, during its first and a portion of its second session. Some delay has occurred in its publication which might have been avoided, had we made arrangements to have the work printed and bound at one of the northern or western cities of the Union. The cost, too, would perhaps have been less. But, as paramount to these considerations, we entertained (whether properly or not our fellow citizens must judge) a feeling of state pride, which induced us to have the work done at home." [Tex. Preface (1848) (emphasis definitely in the original.)]

Despite this shaky start, publication of the Texas Reports proceeded smoothly enough, with minor exceptions such as the Civil War years. A severe paper shortage caused the suspension of the official reports from 1860 through 1866. Confusion thereafter as to which cases should be printed retroactively resulted in a numbering anomaly — i.e., Texas Reports, Vol. 25 Supplement. The preface to this volume contains a (relatively) fascinating cameo history of the period.

The creation of a Court of Appeals with criminal jurisdiction in 1876 spawned a second official report of Texas cases, the Texas Court of Appeals Reports (later the Texas Criminal Reports). In 1886, private enterprise entered the scene, in the form of West Publishing Company's Southwestern Reporter.

Each version had its advantages. The official reports offered synopses of briefs and reporter's headnotes. The Southwestern Reporter provided access to the West "key number" system, as well as copies of Courts of Civil Appeals decisions. Rising publication costs and increasing case volume, however, probably forced many attorneys to choose between the “official” and “unofficial” reporters.

Matters came to a head in 1963, with the introduction of Senate Bill 123, which would have given the Texas Supreme Court and the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals the authority “in such manner as they deem advisable” to declare the volumes of their decisions published by “any person, firm or corporation” (such as West’s Southwestern Reporter: Texas Cases) to be the official reports. The bill sailed through the state senate without opposition, and was reported favorably by the House Judiciary Committee. It failed to pass to third reading by a non-record vote on the House floor, however, and was not revived.

Undeterred by the fact that the “official reporter” legislation was still on the books, the Texas Legislature simply refused to appropriate any money for the printing of the volumes. The Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals took the hint, and ceased to appoint official reporters to publish decisions. (Given the publishing time lag, the last Texas Reports decisions are dated October 1962.)

An argument could be made that the Southwestern Reporter has since become the “official” reporter by estoppel, ratification, adoption or some other fancy theory. After all, the Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals regularly cite their own post-1962 decisions by reference to that publication. West Publishing Company encourages the fiction by printing copies of Texas court rules in the Southwestern Reporter: Texas Cases, a duty given by statute to the “official” publication. Tex. Gov’t Code §22.004(d) (1985). Nonetheless, by legislative fiat, the only “official” version of Texas cases is still the nonexistent Texas Reports or Texas Criminal Reports.

Until recently, this would have been the end of the story, with Texas’ “official” reports consigned to the quiet oblivion of that mausoleum of dead-letter laws, Vernon’s Texas Revised Civil Statutes. The 1985 Texas Legislature has added a new chapter, however, digging up the bones, clothing them in the flesh of minor textual revision, and once again releasing the official court reports upon the unsuspecting legal community in the form of §§22.008 and 22.104 of the new Texas Government Code.

These two sections mandate publication of the decisions of the two high courts. The reporter is required to be a licensed attorney, who “shall promptly prepare the decisions for publication with appropriate syllabuses and statements, proper index and table of cited cases and reported cases.” The volumes are to be “electrotyped.” The statute even requires that the criminal reports be styled “Texas Criminal Reports and be numbered in continuation of the existing reports.”

This new Government Code is part of Texas’ continuing codification program. Under the auspices of the Texas Legislative Council, the program is a worthy effort, having as its goal the gathering together of scattered statutes into a coherent subject-matter code system. In the process, the council is commanded not to “alter the sense, meaning, or effect” of previous statutes. Tex. Gov’t Code §323.007(b). Part of the process, however, as pointed out in the beginning of the Texas Government Code itself, is “to make the law...more accessible and understandable, by ... eliminating repealed, duplicative, unconstitutional, expired, executed, and otherwise ineffective provisions.” Tex. Gov’t Code §1.001(b)(3).

To the uneducated legislative layman, provisions for official court reports which have not been funded for 22 consecutive years might seem to qualify as “ineffective” legislation, ripe for removal as part of the codification process. The Texas Legislative Council, however, carefully rewrote the statutes, rearranging them and updating the language to reflect the fact that the old Board of Control has been replaced by the State Purchasing and General Services Commission.

It is tempting to dismiss the inclusion of these defunct statutes in the new Government Code as a mistake. On the other hand, it is hard to imagine these provisions passing scrutiny by a Legislature containing a fairly liberal sprinkling of attorneys if that body did not mean for those parts of the code to be taken seriously. In addition, as the Texas Code Construction Act reminds us, one must always presume that “the entire statute is intended to be effective” and that “a result feasible of execution is intended.” Tex. Gov’t Code §311.02(2), (4).

Nonetheless, if the Texas Legislature really did want to resurrect the old Texas Reports and Texas Criminal Reports, would not some money have been appropriated to pay the reporters’ salaries and to print the reports? Perhaps our states’ lawmakers meant the position of “reporter” for the Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals to be honorary, giving these tribunals authority broadly analogous to the power of the governor to create “admirals” for the mythical Texas Navy.

Whatever the intent of the Texas Legislature, this quaint and curious anomaly in the statutes will remain, at least until the next legislative session rolls around or the courts decide to use their rule-making authority to tidy up the Texas Government Code on their own. Or perhaps, like the Emperor’s new clothes, the existence of the official Texas Reports will forever be decreed, but with the volumes themselves visible only to the true believers.
T.C. Alderson

Thomas Crittenten Alderson, Jr., 55, of Houston died May 10, 1985.

How To Take a Deposition

In several "et cetera" columns in the Texas Bar Journal during 1985, Judge Jerry Buchmeyer quoted many entertaining answers obtained during depositions.

Due to the interest sparked by those columns, I Solemnly Swear, the source of those quotes, is being republished by Jerry von Sternberg.

The book is published by Eakin Press, P.O. Box 23066, Austin 78735.

There are strange things done 'neath the noon-time sun by lawyers who toil for gold in Anchorage — as evidenced by The Alaska Bar Rag. This irreverent, often sardonic, and marvelously humorous publication of the Alaska Bar Association is the creation of Bar Rag Editor Harry Branson. It is published sporadically — one edition was the "June, July, August Summer Catch-Up Issue," another was the "Suddenly It's Spring February-March-April Edition" — but it always reflects Harry's belief "that the Bar and Bench can occasionally afford a kidding, especially when its members are taking themselves too seriously."2

"Helping" to maintain the Bar Rag's credo — Dignitas, Semper Dignitas3 — is a column written by Gail Roy Fraties (more about Fraties later). For example, consider his all-too-truthful column about legal fictions and insurance companies:

The Swivel Case

Court watchers have awaited with interest the Supreme Court's opinion in Swivel v. Fulano Del Tal, Inc., in which popular Anchorage trial attorney Ben Walters had attempted an innovative approach to jury argument. In the words of Mr. Chief Justice Rabinowitz:

"In this case, Plaintiff's attorney — in closing argument — stated to the jury, 'Some of you no doubt have wondered why I questioned you extensively in my voir dire of the jury panel concerning whether or not you believed in the tooth fairy, the Easter bunny, and Santa Claus. You will have noted that those of you who replied in the negative were assiduously challenged by defense counsel, whereas I kept as many of you as I could. I think that it is appropriate to say that I sought a jury which was in the proper frame of mind to evaluate his Honor's forthcoming instruction that an insurance company is not a party to this case.'"

Trial Judge Victor Carlson thereupon did a brief but spirited in-court imitation of a brown bear with its foot in a trap, and granted a mistrial and a dismissal of the plaintiff's case, with prejudice. From that decision, plaintiff appeals.

"It has been a time-honored custom in the courts of Alaska, as throughout the civilized world, to honor certain legal fictions [citations omitted] and it is not for this court, which even in its more rational moments contends that the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States form but a threshold for our decisions [State v. Ravin, et al.] to avoid the decision which faces it now. The fictions of which I speak, number among them, but are not limited to, the suppositions that:

1. The defendant in a criminal case is presumed innocent.
2. Any witness is presumed to tell the truth.
3. The jury will not discuss the case among themselves (much less with their families and neighbors) before the evidence is in.
4. They will pay no attention to what the judge or counsel have done in their presence, merely because they are instructed not to do so.
5. They will forget testimony, once heard, because the judge later rules that it is inadmissible.
6. There is not an insurance company lurking somewhere behind every effective defense of a civil case.

"The Alaskan people, however pragmatic and simplistic, are highly intelligent individually or in a group. It is inconceivable that such persons can sit through a two-month trial, involving — as they usually do — witnesses flown in from the Persian Gulf and eating their heads off in the lap of luxury while awaiting the vagaries of a 'trailing calendar' — and remain convinced that all of this is being financed by the defendant/motorist.

"It is obvious, even to the untutored eye, that either the federal government or some insurance company is on the job, and has deep pockets, it appears that they have about equal rank. As a practical matter, it is almost impossible to avoid the subject of insurance, once counsel have determined to raise the subject. It does not seem to us that plaintiff's counsel should be forced to demean themselves by the usual ruses — some of which are as follows:

1. Question: 'Do you own controlling interest in any insurance company?' (directed to average middle class jurors).
2. Instructions to one's own witnesses: 'Now, don't mention any word beginning with 'T' — but did you report this accident to anyone other than the police?'
3. The time-honored 'blurt-out' by the plaintiff: 'He said his insurance would pay for it.' All of us, as former trial practitioners, are aware of many similar examples.

"I'm sure the Alaska Bar is well aware that I could go on for 50 more pages but I like to be unpredictable. Sufficient to say this court finds plaintiff's argument not only harmless, but refresh-
